

Sainte-SARAGALLA.—If air, water and iron be combined in a close vessel, a portion of the air combining with the iron will form rust, and it will be found that the remainder will not support flame. This is the cause of the fume which is observed in that part of the air which comes from electric forms to form rust. The root Saragalla contains a spirit or fluid applicable to the cure of scrofulosis, hepatic and venereal diseases, and other diseases of the liver. It is to be administered by combinations or other processes, on the same principle as the validity of a hundred cubic feet of air is condensed into a few drops of oxide of iron; it is clear that it is not to be produced by natural processes. This distillation has been attained by Sainte-Saragalla, which may be justly termed the undisputed sovereign principle of that art.

THE THREE SISTERS OF YORK.

Underneath a greenwood tree,

Once sat gentle maidens three;

Home-made was their apparel,

Bye, by, bairns were defaced;

All by peoples were disgraced;

Sorrows three these sisters three;

When a lady, passing by,

Sighed, "What is the reason why?

On being told, she smiled and showed

The Soap and Pouders of GODNESS!

They tried them on the dame's advice;

And then, in a twinkling, like a

Vanished, like some dark, horrid dream.

When first the rays of morning came,

They were all dressed in bright apparel,

With gold and diamonds, and more and more gaudy;

Not to be wondered at, considering their usefulness.

What on earth, for instance, can be more useful than a soap for washing clothes?

Or a pouder for washing clothes?

Or a soap for washing clothes?
